

I'm seeing them grow in their own awareness and interest in their own country. Where many of these kids would be involved in clubs and wanting to raise money for groups around the world. You know the children in Africa, building wells. They are still doing this and it's a wonderful thing. But they are starting to realize that we have problems here at home that are pretty deep. If we are constantly looking outward, what does that say about us that we are not willing to look inward and see many of the wounds and the wrongs that we have right here at home.
