

In terms of global community, before I joined Oxfam, our social justice club, um obviously everyone knows that there are problems outside of their own little space. There are problems in the world, and once you join a club that can spread awareness so that you yourself become more aware and you start to think of those things more often than you would. I mean normally, on a daily basis people don't normally think about droughts and they don't really think about hunger and things like that. But after joining a club like this you really do start to become more concerned
