

Advice for Teachers and Club Advisors Clip 3

Speaker 1: I'd tell them that as teachers they should reach out, kind of, to the whole school community. Let me rephrase that. That sounded bad. Not as teachers, it's not like that's their job to do that or anything. But I mean they should reach out to the whole school community because sometimes the most unlikely person will want to join a club. I remember like when teachers, or even club leaders or anybody really, when you're advertising a club, you kind of go towards the people you think will be interested. But you can never really tell what people are interested in so the only way to get a lot of members who are passionate and have the drive and the fire towards it, is to advertise to everybody and whoever is interested, they will show up. So I guess, don't let stereotypes or sometimes don't let unlikeliness that you have a feeling about in your head, don't let that stop you from like advertising to other students. Because, like, I would never have thought that I would be part of cross country or track in the past or Unity or anything like that. But I don't think teachers would have felt that I would either, to be honest. So that's surprised me, surprised them. So I'm sure other kids could surprise teachers too.
