Well I think the ESL Ambassador's Club helps students to develop leadership. Realizing that they can do something, such as help an new person come in, and they may not think it's a big deal, but what they start to understand is that they've made a huge impact on someone's life because maybe they're in a very vulnerable state that these new people are feeling. So they can have a huge impact with really what they often perceive as very little effort. But it's huge. And I think after a while they start to see the value in their efforts. In terms of the ESL drama club, they see themselves as agents of change for teachers, for students, the communities.
