

I know that I was dealing last year with the president of the board super council. He's Muslim background. He was dealing with his weekend school that he went to that came under fire for some things that were in some of the literature that they were reading. He felt very discriminated against because they were being taught such great things really about humanism and life etc. and that they had found something very deep in some text and were concentrating on that and not on the good things that were going on. And that made its way into the school discussions and, you know, kind of reared its ugly head and being a bit of a leader he had to defend himself and speak to it and help to defend others. So that's the one incident that comes to mind.
