

I was raised in a very Catholic family. So in grade 9 when I joined SASSY, I didn't know what my individual viewpoints on different issues, on moral or legal issues, about LGBT or trans people were because I was raised in a very specific way. It opened my eyes to a different perspective that was a non-biased viewpoint. Just being in a public school, it really opened my eyes to a lot of different kinds of people, which was really good. I only kind of grew up with a certain kind of mind frame from the people around me.
